

Graffiti in Giggleswick

Giggleswick is one of the quietest villages you could come across in England. The village has a population of 1,410 residents and there hasn't been any criminal activity in the village for years. This is thanks to two reliable officers named Constable Wells and Constable Dillon.

It was a Saturday night and Constable Wells and Dillon were sitting in their police car. The dispatcher announced that there were six children who were out painting their names on the walls of buildings in the village. So, Constables Wells and Dillon got out of their car and began to walk down the main street of the village in search of the children and the graffiti on the walls.

The first name the officers came across was Polly Peterson. The second name the officers came across was Dan Dean. The third name the officers came across was Mandy May. The fourth name the officers came across was Charlie Cook. The fifth name the officers came across was Lola Lake. The sixth name the officers came across was Fred Fisher.

During the early hours of Sunday morning, Constables Wells and Dillon caught the six naughty children. If you put the names into alphabetical order, you will find out the order in which the children were caught.
